Learning will take a problem based approach whereby the curriculum focus on a critical, enquiry based approach to learning. This is one of the most important and significant innovations to education and provides a better opportunity to meet students' needs as well as respond to the environmental changes which accompany Higher Education institutions.

A wide range of teaching and learning methods will be used and these will necessarily involve a number of different activities. These will include:

- Short online lectures (including recommended reading to introduce models and concepts relevant to learning outcomes).
- Live online seminars (using group activities to facilitate critical analysis and live on-line discussion plus discussion board contribution to encourage shared learning).
- Case studies (both videos and exercises/scenarios to enable students to apply their learning to real life situations and to aid their assignment skills).

- Weekly online learning packages (using reflective questions and thinking points, together with guided reading, facts sheets, podcasts and video clips).

There will be three formal, live on-line class seminar sessions of 2 hours each.

Students will study from specially written materials, have tutor support (via online discussion and email) and interact substantially with other students.

The use of group work to allow individuals to learn from each other, and to share best practice. There will also be the opportunity to participate in small group work to practice essential skills such as communication, team working and argumentation as a way to feedback group work and discussion.

The assessment will be in two parts; firstly a workplace based report in which the student will identify one contemporary theme in their own organisations and investigate it in relation to human resource management and secondly a small group assignment based on a current theme that will be developed online.

The assessment will be fully explored in the live seminar sessions.
